Thirtieth Sunday in Ordinary Time
Mark 10:46-52

As Jesus was leaving Jericho with his disciples and a sizable crowd, Bartimaeus, a blind man, the son of Timaeus, sat by the roadside begging. On hearing that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out and say, "Jesus, son of David, have pity on me." And many rebuked him, telling him to be silent. But he kept calling out all the more, "Son of David, have pity on me." Jesus stopped and said, "Call him." So they called the blind man, saying to him, "Take courage; get up, he is calling you." He threw aside his cloak, sprang up, and came to Jesus. Jesus said to him in reply, "What do you want me to do for you?" The blind man replied to him, "Master, I want to see." Jesus told him, "Go your way; your faith has saved you." Immediately he received his sight and followed him on the way.

Background:

In last week's gospel, Mark described Jesus' response to James and John, who asked for the seats of honor and power when Jesus comes into his glory. In his response, Jesus told them that Gentile rulers lord over those under them, thus making their importance felt. In contrast, Jesus has come to be a servant, not to be served, and to give his life in ransom for the many. This week's gospel text follows immediately after that text in Mark. Here Jesus is portrayed as living out what he has just instructed the disciples: Jesus is the servant who responds to the call of blind Bartimaeus.

Bartimaeus is very clever in how he has made his request. No doubt he has heard of Jesus' reputation for healing, and therefore he shouts out repeatedly, "Son of David, have pity on me." The phrase does two things. By calling Jesus the "Son of David," he is acknowledging him as the Messiah, and linking him with Solomon, the son of David. Solomon was known as a wise and competent ruler. Second, by asking for mercy, he is implying that he be given something that is owed to him, asking for a debt to be paid. The debt that needs to be repaid is the repeated public praise that the blind man has already offered by calling out after Jesus with the title "Son of David." If Jesus accepts the praise, he is responding to the debt he owes Bartimaeus. Assuming that the large crowd is blocking Bartimaeus from Jesus' view, Jesus calls him. The crowd who are usually voiceless in the gospels move from trying to silence Bartimaeus to encouraging him to approach Jesus. Jesus asks what he would have him do for him. Bartimaeus tells Jesus that he wants to see. Jesus tells him that his faith has saved him and to go on his way. Now Bartimaeus is in debt both to God who restored his sight and to Jesus who acted as the servant of God. In recognition of his debt, Bartimaeus now joins Jesus as he makes his way to Jerusalem.

If we step back into Mark's gospel, there is another beautiful facet of this gospel to discover. Recall the gospel from two weeks ago, the story known as the Rich Young Man. The man came to Jesus asking what he had to do to inherit eternal life. Although he had kept the commandments since his youth, he was unable to accept Jesus' invitation to come and follow him because he had many possessions. The gospel says that he went away sad (Mark 10:17-30). However, Bartimaeus, when he learns that Jesus is calling him, throws off his cloak, springs up, and comes to Jesus, never to look back. Beggars usually spread their cloak before them to collect coins that were tossed in their direction. Imagine Bartimaeus being blind and hearing Jesus calling him, jumping up to respond to Jesus' invitation and the coins he had collected flying in different directions. The contrast between the response of the two men to Jesus' invitation is a delightful part of the text that might be overlooked.

Even earlier in his gospel Mark recorded another story of Jesus encountering a blind man (Mark 8:22-26). This central section of Mark's gospel is framed by two stories of Jesus' encounters with blind men. In this section of the gospel, Jesus has been revealing who he was and the events that awaited him in Jerusalem. But the disciples have been reluctant to comprehend Jesus' teaching and have needed to be instructed repeatedly on the role of Jesus' disciples. In these final verses before Jesus enters Jerusalem, Mark presents us with Jesus who is the servant even of the blind and the outcasts. Bartimaeus is a model of faithful disciples who leave everything to follow Jesus to Jerusalem.

Reflection Questions:

1. What is your experience of people with physical disabilities?
2. How do you understand the crowd's interaction with Bartimaeus?
3. Have you ever felt like what you wanted to say to God wasn't important enough?
4. Have there been people in your life who told you, "Take courage, get up, he is calling you?"
5. Place yourself in the scene of today's gospel. Maybe you are Bartimaeus's cousin and have just helped him set up for the day as the events unfold.
 - How do you feel about Bartimaeus and having to help him set up each day?
 - What are you thinking when the crowd starts coming?
 - And when Bartimaeus starts calling out over and over, louder and louder?
 - And when the crowd tells him to be quiet?
 - And when Jesus hears him calling?
 - And when Jesus tells them to call Bartimaeus over?
 - What are you thinking when you hear the crowd now tell him to come to Jesus, that he has nothing to fear?
 - And when you see Bartimaeus, blind but still going as fast as he can to Jesus?
 - Can you hear Jesus ask him what it is he wants him to do for him?
 - What happens inside you as you hear Bartimaeus say, "Master, I want to see."
 - What happens within you the moment you realize that Bartimaeus can see?
6. And if Jesus were then to turn to you and ask, "N_____, what would like me to do for you," what would you say?
7. Can you talk with God about the honesty of Bartimaeus, or about whatever this gospel text is saying to you now?

Excerpts from the readings for October 24, 2021, the Thirtieth Sunday in Ordinary Time

Thus says the Lord: Shout with joy for Jacob, exult at the head of the nations; proclaim your praise and say: The Lord has delivered his people, the remnant of Israel.
Behold, I will bring them back from the land of the north;
I will gather them from the ends of the world, with the blind and the lame in their midst, the mothers and those with child; they shall return as an immense throng.
They departed in tears, but I will console them and guide them;
I will lead them to brooks of water, on a level road, so that none shall stumble.

For I am a father to Israel, Ephraim is my first-born.

The Lord has done great things for us; we are filled with joy.
When the Lord brought back the captives of Zion, we were like men dreaming.
Then our mouth was filled with laughter, and our tongue with rejoicing.
Then they said among the nations, "The Lord has done great things for them."
The Lord has done great things for us; we are glad indeed.
Restore our fortunes, O Lord, like the torrents in the southern desert.
Those that sow in tears shall reap rejoicing.
Although they go forth weeping, carrying the seed to be sown,
They shall come back rejoicing, carrying their sheaves.

Brothers and sisters: Every high priest is taken from among men and made their representative before God, to offer gifts and sacrifices for sins.
He is able to deal patiently with the ignorant and erring, for he himself is beset by weakness and so, for this reason, must make sin offerings for himself as well as for the people.
No one takes this honor upon himself but only when called by God, just as Aaron was.
In the same way, it was not Christ who glorified himself in becoming high priest, but rather the one who said to him: You are my son: this day I have begotten you;
just as he says in another place: You are a priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek.

As Jesus was leaving Jericho with his disciples and a sizable crowd, Bartimaeus, a blind man, the son of Timaeus, sat by the roadside begging. On hearing that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out, "Jesus, son of David, have pity on me." Many rebuked him, telling him to be silent.
But he kept calling out all the more, "Son of David, have pity on me." Jesus stopped and said, "Call him."
So they called the blind man, saying to him, "Take courage; get up, Jesus is calling you."
He threw aside his cloak and came to Jesus. Jesus said to him, "What do you want me to do for you?"
The blind man replied to him, "Master, I want to see." Jesus told him, "Go your way; your faith has saved you." Immediately he received his sight and followed him on the way.

Excerpts from Jeremiah 31:7-9; Psalm 126:1-6; Hebrews 5:1-6; and Mark 10:46-52

From Joe:

Friends,

Here are the gospel background and reflection questions for October 24th, as prepared by Franciscan spiritual director Fr. Paul Gallagher. The gospel from Mark tells the story of blind Bartimaeus' persistence in asking,
"Jesus, Son of David, have pity on me!" When Jesus asks what he wants, he replies, "I want to see." Jesus tells him,
"Your faith has saved you," and he receives his sight and then follows Jesus.

The other readings make reference to the joyful return of the Israelites, including the blind and lame, and the high priest dealing patiently with the erring before God. In the first reading from Jeremiah, "The Lord has delivered his people, the remnant of Israel. I will gather them from the ends of the world, with the blind and the lame in their midst; none shall stumble." Psalm 126 declares, "When the Lord brought back the captives of Zion, they shall come back rejoicing. He has done great things for us." In the second reading, from the letter to the Hebrews, Paul writes, "Every high priest is men's representative before God, to offer sacrifices for sins. In becoming high priest, Christ glorified not himself, but the one who said to him, 'You are my son.'"
