The Epiphany of the Lord
Matthew 2:1-12

When Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of King Herod, behold, Magi from the east arrived in Jerusalem, saying, "Where is the newborn king of the Jews? We saw his star at its rising and have come to do him homage."

When King Herod heard this, he was greatly troubled, and all Jerusalem with him. Assembling all the chief priests and the scribes of the people, he inquired of them where the Messiah was to be born. They said to him, "In Bethlehem of Judea, for thus it has been written through the prophet: 'And you, Bethlehem, land of Judah, are by no means least among the rulers of Judah; since from you shall come a ruler, who is to shepherd my people Israel.'" Then Herod called the Magi secretly and ascertained from them the time of the star's appearance. He sent them to Bethlehem and said, "Go and search diligently for the child. When you have found him, bring me word, that I too may go and do him homage."

After their audience with the king they set out. And behold, the star that they had seen at its rising preceded them, until it came and stopped over the place where the child was. They were overjoyed at seeing the star, and on entering the house they saw the child with Mary his mother. They prostrated themselves and did him homage. Then they opened their treasures and offered him gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh.

And having been warned in a dream not to return to Herod, they departed for their country by another way.

Background:

The first chapter of Matthew's Gospel ends with Joseph carrying out the instructions he had received in a dream. "When Joseph awoke, he did as the angel of the Lord had commanded him and took his wife into his home. He had no relations with her until she bore a son, and he named him Jesus" (Matthew 1:24-25). The next event that Matthew describes is the arrival of the Magi in Jerusalem. There may be a temptation to fill in details from other Gospels respecting the birth of Jesus, that are not included in Matthew's description of it. Another approach would be to spend some time considering what makes Matthew's narrative as complete as he wants to present it for his community.

Matthew's unique presentation of the birth of Jesus includes details like Joseph accepting Mary into his home as his wife, which spared Mary the possibility of being sent away in quiet disgrace, or even the possibility of being stoned. He also reports that it is Joseph that gives Jesus his name. (Luke reports the name was given to Mary at the annunciation: "Behold, you will conceive in your womb and bear a son, and you shall name him Jesus." (Luke 1:31)) Matthew has also skipped over such events as the census, not finding room in the city and therefore seeking shelter in a manger, the angels declaring the birth, and the shepherds' experience of the scene. Matthew does not even name Mary in telling us of the birth of Jesus. Despite not having relations with Mary, Joseph takes on the responsibility of the child as if he were his son. But Matthew provides other details that will help his community understand how God has been unfolding God's plan in the birth of this child. Some of Matthew's details are present in today's Gospel text.

The Magi were part of the gentile world into which Jesus was born. The Magi studied the heavens for clues to the meaning of life. They functioned as political and religious advisers to the rulers of the Median and later the Persian empires. At one point in Persian history, the Magi revolted and replaced their king, demonstrating their importance within their culture. Given that they were looking for a person of significance in Judea, it is no surprise that they would first go to Jerusalem, the center of the religious and political world of Judea.

But Jesus is an entirely different kind of king, and therefore not to be found in Jerusalem, but rather in the small isolated community of Bethlehem. When the Magi arrived there and entered the house, they first saw the child with his mother, and then prostrated themselves before the infant. Matthew has described this encounter between the Magi and the child Jesus in such a way that his audience recognizes that even those without the benefit of their sacred tradition are able to recognize the hand of God at work here. Creation itself is revealing the way, so that those who are open and seek the ways of God can recognize what has taken place. Who these Magi were, their names, how many there were--these details that have been added later are not described by Matthew. The Magi are important because they help establish that the whole world was affected by what God had done, and now they can fade into history. Having discovered the child, they pay him homage, offer their gifts, and then step aside so that God can unravel God's divine plan. The magi are much like Simeon and Anna in Luke's Gospel, who have waited faithfully most of their lives. Once the magi have seen the hand of God at work in the child Jesus, they praise God, and then depart by another route. Their role is similar to Simeon's in Luke, who on seeing the child Jesus can say "Now, Master, you may let your servant go in peace, according to your word, for my eyes have seen your salvation, which you prepared in the sight of all the people, a light for revelations to the Gentiles, and glory for your people Israel." (Luke 2:29-32)

The Magi's response to the birth of Jesus is in sharp contrast to that of King Herod, the living and reigning King of Judea. Herod knows that he has not fathered an heir. Therefore, the news that there exists a newborn heir is a source of concern to him. Herod is also different from the Magi in that he is merely a puppet ruler for Rome, while the Magi have esteem and authority in their society. While the Magi have nothing but a star that signals the birth of a person of importance, Herod has advisors who know of the prophecies about the birth of the messiah, but they seem to be oblivious to the fact that the child has arrived. Herod's reaction is one of distress. He is not moved to personally join the magi in seeking out the child Jesus. Rather, he directs the Magi to bring him the information he desires and will use against the infant Jesus. The Magi have taken on the difficult and dangerous task of leaving their homeland to track down the person whom the star's appearance signifies. They have brought precious gifts that indicate his importance and they bow before him. Herod keeps his intention secret, and in secret he asks the Magi to act as his news bearers.

The Magi and Herod represent two opposite responses to the presence of Jesus. Those who have the advantage of being familiar with the religious traditions are unable to identify who Jesus is. They respond with fear, and even murder of the innocent. Those without the benefit of being familiar with the religious tradition are willing to take on personal risk. They recognize the significance of this infant's birth: God's love is powerful and pervasive--it will not be thwarted. They offer the gifts that they have, bow reverently, and take their leave.

Reflection Questions:

1. Recall some of the times you have interacted with infants and young children. What impact do they have on you? What kind of emotions stir within you in their presence?
2. Focus on the role of caregiver and protecting infants and young children. What is your experience, or lack of experience, in that kind of role? What emotions and thoughts and feelings present within you as you think of your experience?
3. Who are the people you know who seem to be gifted at being with infants and young children? What qualities do they possess that make them good at being with the young?
4. Do they know of your appreciation of their gift? What difference might that make to them if they knew how you felt?
5. What is your experience of encounter with people from other cultures? What kind of feelings are present about that experience, or non-experience?
6. Do you know people who are clear and up-front about who they are and their intentions?
7. What does the importance Matthew places on Joseph in his recounting of the early events of Jesus' birth say to you?
8. The Magi were men who were comfortable enough with the darkness to study changes in the night sky. What are the areas of darkness in your own life today? How do you respond to those areas? What do the Magi suggest to you?
9. Imagine yourself arriving with the Magi in Bethlehem. Is there anything you would like to offer as your gift to Jesus?

10. Can you take some time to talk with God about the role of Joseph, the magi, and Herod in the birth of Jesus, or about God choosing to become present among us at this point in history, or about any other thought or feeling that arose within you from this Gospel?

Excerpts from the readings for January 4, 2026, The Epiphany of the Lord

Rise up in splendor, Jerusalem! Your light has come, the glory of the Lord shines upon you.
See, darkness covers the earth, and thick clouds cover the peoples;
but upon you the Lord shines, and over you appears his glory.
Nations shall walk by your light, and kings by your shining radiance.
Raise your eyes and look about; they all gather and come to you:
your sons come from afar, and your daughters in the arms of their nurses.
Then you shall be radiant at what you see, your heart shall throb and overflow, for the riches of the sea shall be emptied out before you, the wealth of nations shall be brought to you.
Caravans of camels shall fill you, dromedaries from Midian and Ephah;
all from Sheba shall come bearing gold and frankincense, and proclaiming the praises of the Lord.

*Lord, every nation on earth will adore you.
O God, with your judgment endow the king, and with your justice, the king's son;
He shall govern your people with justice and your afflicted ones with judgment.
Justice shall flower in his days, and profound peace, till the moon be no more.
May he rule from sea to sea, and from the River to the ends of the earth.
The kings of Tarshish and the Isles shall offer gifts; the kings of Arabia and Seba shall bring tribute.
All kings shall pay him homage, all nations shall serve him.
For he shall rescue the afflicted; he shall have pity for the lowly and the poor.*

Brothers and sisters:

You have heard of the stewardship of God's grace that was given to me for your benefit, namely, that the mystery was made known to me by revelation.
It was not made known to people in other generations as it has now been revealed to his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit:
that the Gentiles are coheirs, members of the same body, and copartners in the promise in Christ Jesus through the Gospel.

When Jesus was born in Bethlehem, magi from the east arrived in Jerusalem, saying, "Where is the newborn king of the Jews? We saw his star at its rising and came to do him homage." When King Herod heard this, he asked the chief priests and scribes where the Christ was to be born. They said to him, "In Bethlehem of Judea, for thus it has been written through the prophet: from you, Bethlehem, shall come a ruler, who is to shepherd my people Israel." Then Herod called the magi secretly and ascertained from them the time of the star's appearance. He sent them to Bethlehem and said, "Go and search diligently for the child. When you have found him, bring me word, that I too may go and do him homage." They set out, and the star that they had seen came and stopped over the place where the child was. They were overjoyed at seeing the star, and on entering the house they saw the child with Mary his mother. They prostrated themselves and did him homage. Then they opened their treasures and offered him gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh. Having been warned in a dream not to return to Herod, they departed for their country by another way.

Excerpts from Isaiah 60:1-6; Psalm 72:1-2, 7-8, 10-13; Ephesians 3:2-3, 5-6; and Matthew 2:1-12

Friends,

Here are the Gospel background and reflection questions for January 4th, the Feast of the Epiphany, as prepared by Franciscan spiritual director Fr. Paul Gallagher. In the Gospel from Matthew, the Magi from the east arrive to pay homage to the newborn king, whose star they saw at its rising. Inquiring first in Jerusalem, they are directed to Bethlehem, and instructed by Herod to return and report what they find.

The other readings also have references to the revelation of one who shall rule nations, a just king who will be honored and revered by other kings. In the first reading, Isaiah prophecies, "Jerusalem! Your light has come, the glory of the Lord shines upon you. You shall be radiant at what you see, the wealth of nations shall be brought to you." Psalm 72 proclaims, "He shall govern with justice, and all kings shall pay him homage, all nations shall serve him." In the second reading, Paul writes to the Ephesians, "The mystery was made known by revelation, that the Gentiles are coheirs, members of the same body, and copartners in the promise in Christ Jesus through the Gospel."

On this feast of the Epiphany, the Gospel chronology takes a step back and gives us Matthew's story of the Magi visit, the part that relates what they said and did, and where they went. Last Sunday, as was fitting for the feast of the Holy Family, we heard what happened in the aftermath of their visit, the actions that Joseph took to escape the danger and protect the family from Herod. When the chief priests and scribes are asked by Herod where the Messiah was to be born, it is the prophet Micah they quote when they name Bethlehem. This is where Herod then sends the Magi. Isaiah in the first reading uses six different references to light to describe the revelation of the Holy One of Israel, who has glorified the Lord God and his name, who will gather the nations to himself. "Over you appears his glory... Nations shall walk by your light, and kings by your shining radiance."
